M3 · Dział 11: Egzamin „What if…” / M3 · Part 11: The “What If” Exam

Let’s start with the scary one. What if you finally put the paid course out there and it just tanks — nobody buys?	Honestly? If it flopped, I’d just start over. I launched MadreM knowing the first version might tank, so a flop wouldn’t wreck me — I’d tweak it, put it back out, and go again. Starting over isn’t failure; quitting is.
What if you’d started this whole channel a year ago, back when you first had the idea?	If I’d started a year ago, I would have had a following by now — a few thousand subscribers, some steady income, real momentum. That’s the part that stings. The best time to launch was last year; the second-best time is today, so I just keep going.
Looking back, is there anything you honestly regret?	Yeah — I wish I’d put out videos back then, when the idea was still fresh. If only I’d trusted it sooner, I’d be miles ahead. But there’s no use kicking myself; I can’t rewind it, so I start from where I am.
Here’s a dark one. What if your early students had already given up on you while you dragged your feet in Norway?	That’s a real fear. They may have stopped caring by the time I finally got moving — I should have left that job sooner and gone all in. If I’d quit a year earlier, I’d have a real audience today instead of building from zero.

Let’s talk money. What if the channel never makes you rich — what’s the number that actually matters?	As long as I break even in the first year, I’ll call it a win. If it broke even and just covered the bills, I’d happily keep going — I’m not chasing a fortune yet. The day I break even is the day the model earns its keep.
How do you actually think about the risk of going all in — no salary, moving back home?	I try to weigh the risks honestly instead of pretending there aren’t any. If I hadn’t weighed the risks up front, I’d have panicked the first quiet month. Weighing the risks calmly is exactly what lets me sleep at night.
Would you ever spend real money on paid ads to grow faster?	At some point, yeah — I’d take a shot at paid ads once the free course has earned an audience. If a video took off on its own, maybe I wouldn’t need to; but I’m not scared to take a shot at something that could flop. That’s the whole point of doing this.
What does that free course actually give the people who watch it?	It provides a full matura course for nothing — every topic, start to finish, no paywall. What I give away builds trust, and trust is what sells the paid lessons later. The more value I provide up front, the easier the paid side gets.
So when do you actually launch the paid tutoring, then?	I’ll launch the paid lessons once the channel gains traction — probably after a hundred videos or so. I’d rather launch late to a real audience than launch early to an empty room. Put the free stuff out first, earn the trust, then charge.

If you had to bet on yourself right now — make or break — what’s the honest answer?	Make, no question. If it flopped tomorrow, I’d start over the next morning — that’s how sure I am. I’ve weighed the risks, I know I might not break even for a year, and I’m still all in. The version of me that plays it safe is the one I’d actually regret.
Last one. What would you want to say to yourself a year from now?	That I took the shot. If I’d played it safe, I would have stayed exactly where I was — comfortable and stuck. I’d rather launch and learn than sit on the fence wondering “what if.” Whatever happens, at least I stopped waiting for the perfect moment.

Wymowa (powtórka — pułapki):

- launch /lɔːntʃ/ — jedna sylaba, „ɔː” jak w thought, zakończone „-tʃ” jak w church: „lonчtʃ”, nie „lanć” ani „launk”. Przeszły launched /lɔːntʃt/ — końcówka „-tʃt”, nie „-ćed”.

- weigh /weɪ/ — homofon z way; „gh” NIEME, dyftong „eɪ”. weigh the risks = „łej-də-risks”, nie „łejg”.
- risks /rɪsks/ — trudny zbieg „-sks” na końcu; wymów wszystkie: „ri-sks”, nie „risk” ani „riks”. Amerykańskie „r” na początku r-barwne.
- break even /ˌbreɪk ˈiːvən/ — akcent na E(ven); break z dyftongiem „eɪ” (jak make), even z długim „iː”. Razem „brejk-IJ-wən”.
- provide /prəˈvaɪd/ — akcent na VIDE; druga sylaba to „vaɪd” (jak wide), nie „wid”. Pierwsza „prə-“ słabnie do szwa.
- take a shot at /ˌteɪk ə ˈʃɑːt æt/ — shot z amerykańskim „ɑː” (jak hot), nie „ o”; flap t łączy „shot at” → „ʃɑː-rət”. Akcent na SHOT.
- would have → w mowie would’ve /ˈwʊdəv/ — „wu-dəv”, NIGDY „would of”. I’d have → „ajd-əv”. To klucz do 3rd/mixed conditional.
- should have → should’ve /ˈʃʊdəv/ — „szu-dəv”, nie „szud hav” ani „should of”. I should’ve left = „aj-szu-dəv-left”.

Typowe błędy Polaka (finał M3 — gramatyka warunkowa):

- 2nd conditional — czas przeszły w warunku, `'d` w skutku: If it flopped, I’d start over. NIE „If it would flop, I would start” i NIE „If it flops, I’d start” (to już 1st, realny). Warunek nierealny/hipotetyczny → If + past simple, would + bezokolicznik.
- 3rd conditional — NIGDY „If I would have”: If I’d started (= If I had started), nie „If I would have started”. „would have” idzie TYLKO w skutku: …I would have had a following. Podwójne „would have” w obu połówkach to najczęstszy błąd Polaka.
- mixed conditional — dwa różne czasy w połówkach: warunek o przeszłości (If I’d quit sooner) + skutek o teraźniejszości (*I’d have a real audience today), albo odwrotnie. Nie musisz trzymać obu połówek w jednym czasie.
- modal perfect (`may/should/might + have + III forma`): They may have stopped caring, I should have left sooner. Po have zawsze III forma (past participle: stopped, left, had), nie bezokolicznik i nie „to”.
- `wish` + past perfect o żalu z przeszłości: I wish I’d put out videos back then (= żałuję, że wtedy nie wrzucałem). NIE „I wish I put out” (to teraźniejszy żal) i NIE „I wish I would have put”. If only działa tak samo: If only I’d trusted it sooner.
- `break even` — bez „to zero” i bez rodzajnika: to break even = wyjść na zero; NIE „break to zero”, „break even point” (to rzeczownik: the break-even point) ani „make even”. Przeszły: broke even, nie „breaked”.

- `take a shot at` + rzeczownik/gerund: take a shot at paid ads / at doing it, nie „take a shot to do” ani „take a shot for”. Idiom = spróbować czegoś trudnego, nie dosłowny „strzał”.
- `provide` — provide sb WITH sth albo provide sth TO sb: provide students with a course / provide a course to/for students; NIE „provide students a course” po polsku „zapewnić komuś coś” kusi do złej składni.
