So tell me — why are you going out on your own with this tutoring thing?	I spent months stuck on it, but at some point you just have to make a call. I made the call: I'm starting my own math tutoring brand, MadreM, instead of taking another salaried gig.
Weren't you on the fence about it for a long time?	For way too long, honestly. I finally got off the fence once I realized that moving back in with my parents buys me a runway — a few months with no rent to actually try this.
And how committed are you, really?	I'm fully committed. The day I wrap up in Norway, I'm going all in — no side job, no plan B, at least for the first stretch.
What was the moment you actually decided?	Telling my parents out loud was the moment I pulled the trigger. Once you say it to people who'll remember, there's no quiet backing out.
So there's no going back now?	None. It was that one conversation that did it — the second I said it out loud, the decision was real.
When did it start to feel real?	Only after I told everyone did it actually sink in. Saying it to my own reflection in the mirror does nothing; saying it to Jake does.

Walk me through how you're building the channel.	First I set up the YouTube channel and a clean recording setup — screen capture plus a decent mic. Nothing fancy; I just need it to work.
What exactly are you putting out before you charge anyone?	I'm putting together a full, free matura math course in Polish — start to finish, no paywall. Solid teaching first, paid tutoring later.
That's a lot of content. What's the actual plan?	The plan is volume. I want to crank out about two videos a day for two months — roughly a hundred and twenty of them — consistency over polish.
Aren't you worried they won't be perfect?	I'd rather get them out than get them perfect. You put it out there, you learn from the comments, and the next one's better.
Won't free content just eat into the paid side?	If anything, the free course does the opposite — it builds trust, and trust is what sells the paid lessons. I'd argue good free teaching is the best ad I've got.
Why not charge a thousand złoty like the others?	Because most of those are thin content with a big price tag. Clean, honest teaching should win on its own — no fake-guru act needed.

How do you teach on camera with no student in front of you?	I just walk the viewer through the problem the way I'd walk a real student through it — one step at a time, out loud, like we're sitting at the same desk.
What do you want viewers to think of you on screen?	I want to come across as clear and credible — not slick, not salesy. If the explanation is clean, the credibility takes care of itself.
What's the hardest part of recording live?	You have to think on your feet. A take goes sideways, you catch your own mistake mid-sentence, and you keep rolling instead of starting over.
How do you make abstract math stick?	I back up every rule with a concrete example — a real matura task — so it's never just theory. Show it on a real task and it lands.
Do you script every word?	No. I sketch the steps, then I walk through it live and think on my feet for the rest. A little roughness makes it feel human.
So polish isn't the priority?	Right. It's the explanations that matter, not the editing. Clarity over production value, every time.

Living back at your parents' — aren't you scared you'll slack off?	That's my biggest fear, honestly. It's easy to slack off when no one's watching and there's no boss and no rent clock ticking.
So how do you keep yourself honest?	I tell people my deadlines out loud so they hold me accountable. When my parents and Jake know the number, I can't quietly do thirty percent and call it a day.
Couldn't you just tell yourself you're "kind of working"?	That's exactly the trap. If I let myself think "I'm sort of doing something," I'm just kidding myself — fooling myself that looking busy is the same as actually working.
What did your parents say when you told them the plan?	They asked whether I was actually serious about it, or just hiding out at home. Fair question — so I gave them the deadline as proof.
What about everyone your age moving ahead of you?	Yeah, twenty-seven, and friends have cars, mortgages, kids. It's easy to feel like I'm falling behind. But I keep telling myself this is a long game.
Do you worry you've fallen behind for good?	Not really. You only fall behind if you measure your chapter one against someone else's chapter ten. Different races.

If you had to sum it up — why now?	Because I finally got off the fence and made the call. I'm all in, I've told the people who'll hold me accountable, and the runway won't last forever.
What's the one thing that has to go right?	Consistency. It was the daily reps that built every channel I admire — not one viral video, but a hundred quiet ones cranked out on schedule.
When do you think this actually pays off?	Only after months of putting videos out there will the paid side start to move. If anything, I'd argue the slow build is the point — trust compounds.
What scares you most, looking ahead?	Slacking off and kidding myself that looking busy counts as working. So I keep it simple: set up the channel, put together the course, crank out the videos, and don't lie to myself about the count.
Last one — how do you handle the comparison trap?	Honestly, comparison is the fastest way to quit. Friends asked whether I felt behind, and sure, sometimes — but I'm playing a longer game, and you can't rush a runway.

Typowe błędy Polaka:

- make a call tu = „zdecydować / przesądzić sprawę”, nie dosłowne „zadzwoń”; call it = „zamknąć temat / uznać za skończone”.
- get off the fence — z rodzajnikiem: „get off THE fence”, nie „get off fence”.
- go all in — bez „to go all in INTO”; mówi się all in ON something („all in on this”), nie „all in into”.
- pull the trigger — pull the trigger ON something („pull the trigger on this”), nie „for/with”.
- set up (czasownik) rozdzielnie: set up a channel / set it up; rzeczownik setup razem.
- put together (czasownik) rozdzielnie: put together a course / put it together.
- crank out = klepać/produkować masowo; nie samo „crank” i nie dosłowne „kręcić”.
- put it out there = upublicznic/wypuścić; nie dosłowne „położyć to tam”.
- come across as + przymiotnik/rzeczownik (come across as clear), nie „come across like clear”; „as”, nie „like”.
- think on your feet to reagować w biegu, NIE „myśleć na nogach”; nie tłumacz dosłownie.
- back up — back it up WITH examples (with, nie „by examples”).
- hold accountable — hold someone accountable FOR something; nie „accountable to do”.
- slack off — nieprzechodnie: slack off = obijać się; nie „slack off the work”.
- kid yourself — zwrotne: don't kid yourself; nie „kid me” w tym znaczeniu.
- fall behind — fall behind (on something); przeszłe fell / fallen behind, nie „falled”.
- asked whether/if = pytanie zależne — BEZ inwersji i bez znaku zapytania: asked whether I was serious (nie „asked whether was I serious”).

- Only after... did... wymaga inwersji po „Only” na początku zdania: Only after I told them did it sink in (nie „Only after I told them it sank in”).
- It was X that... — cleft z that (lub who o osobie), nie „what”: It was the reps that built it, nie „...what built it”.
- if anything = „wręcz przeciwnie / jeśli już”, łagodzi sąd; nie znaczy „jeśli coś”.
